

General Discussion Questions on Corruption

How does the author portray corruption—as an individual moral failing, a systemic issue, or both?

In the text, is corruption presented as inevitable, or as something that can be resisted?

How does corruption affect the balance of power between characters?

Does the author suggest that corruption starts with greed, fear, ambition, or something else?

Which characters become corrupt, and what motivates them?

Are there characters who resist corruption? If so, how, and at what cost?

Does the text present corruption as tied to wealth, power, or survival?