

General Discussion Questions on Endurance

In the text you've read, is endurance portrayed as a passive act of waiting or an active struggle?

Does the author depict endurance as a choice, an instinct, or a necessity?

How does enduring hardship shape the protagonist's identity?

Are there moments when endurance leads to personal growth, and moments when it causes harm?

Is there a distinction between enduring and overcoming in the story?

Does the character merely survive, or do they transform through the act of enduring?