

General Discussion Questions on Survival

Does the story suggest that humans are inherently resilient, or that survival depends on external circumstances?

Are there actions taken for survival that the reader finds justified or unjustified, and why?

How does the author portray the tension between individual survival and the survival of others?

Does the story suggest that survival comes at a cost, and if so, what is it?

Does the story romanticize survival, or does it present it realistically and harshly?